Unique Features Planned for 3d and 4th Brigade Encampment

Preparations are being carefully planned for the annual manoeuvers of the Third and Fourth Brigades to be held at Selinsgrove, during July, and all indications point to these encampments being among the most successful ever held for the National Guard.

Selinsgrove has undoubtedly fine advantages as the location for the manoeuvers, and the site selected for the camp could hardly be improved upon. The ground is situated in close proximity to the forks of the Susquehanna river, thus providing unusual facilities for the study and practice of military problems. Two years ago, the Third Brigade held its manoeuvers at this point, and an even larger site has been secured for the camp this summer, and it is anticipated that even more satisfactory results will be obtained through the tour of duty.

Both Generals Clement and Coryell, it is said, expect to march the troops across the river on a pontoon bridge, constructed by their own men, during one of the war games. This is a practical study, which is novel in the Guard, and should not only serve as instruction of the most practical form, but likewise stimulate the interest of the men in the service to its highest pitch. It will be like war times indeed when the two Brigades march in this manner across the broad Susquehanna, and the accomplishment of the manoeuver should, by attracting general attention throughout the State, result in numerous applications for enlistments in the companies of the Guard. This plan is so unique in these modern days, that doubtless the banks of the river will be crowded with operators of moving picture apparatus, with the prospects that the achievement of the Brigades will later be displayed on the screen in thousands of exhibition halls throughout the country.

CAMERON PARK, SUNBURY. CAR FOR SELINSGROVE.

It is interesting to note that the camp will be rain-proof. The ground quickly absorbs any downpour of the elements, and this condition of course is highly pleasing to the soldier. The Third Brigade encountered several rain storms, while encamped at this point, two years ago, and found no real discomfort from the water. So pleased in fact were the officers of the Brigade with the conditions generally at the camp, that they are looking forward with pleasure to a return to the town.

This proximity to the river, is, in fact, an advantage of tremendous proportions to a military camp. In the practical study of military problems, it has been found that with a mixed topography, in which both open and closed grounds are provided, a greater variety of instruction may be obtained, in contrast to that of a site in which the land is all of the same formation. The engineers in particular should profit by this combination of land and water.

As another special feature of the encampments, arrangements are being made for an aviation detail to give flights daily during the manoeuvers. There are quite a number of the men of the Guard, who are licensed aviators, and it is the present plan to have them assemble at Selinsgrove, under the charge of several lieutenants, and really perform military duty above ground. This also is an innovation in the Guard. The aviators will be called upon to take pictures of the camp, to carry orders from one point to another, and to serve as reconnoiters. It is probable that there will be a mid-air combat between groups of the aviators, but this sensational feature has not as yet assumed definite form.

The water supply of the camp is to be furnished from the famous Penn's Creek, which is a noted spring stream in the Susquehanna valley. Its flow is well known as pure, and there need be no fears of disease on this score. The merchants of both Selinsgrove and Sunbury are keenly interested in the encampments, and propose to maintain their established reputation for providing the requisites for a good mess. The camp is located in the heart of a rich agricultural section, and plenty of fresh wholesome vegetables will be found.

The people of Selinsgrove are intensely patriotic and devoted to the Guard. They are deeply interested in the success of the manoeuvers and are striving to secure a company of infantry in their own town. It is very probable that a new company will result from the interest in the service developed by the encampments.

The young men of Susquehanna University, which is located in the town, would no doubt be glad to avail themselves of the opportunity to obtain a military training, which is being advocated through the country by the faculties of educational institutions, and would serve as the nucleus for this unit.

The men of the service are assured of a hearty welcome when they arrive at Selinsgrove. Only recently, the town council passed resolutions commending the splendid personal conduct of the Third Brigade troops during the encampment of two years ago, and extending them a cordial invitation to return.

The hospitality of the citizens has long been famous, and great preparations to entertain the army of expected visitors are now under way. The town has ample accommodations with three local hotels, and in addition the university will place its large dormitories at the disposal of the guests. Many of the citizens will also extend the courtesy of their homes.

Excerpts from the general orders of General Clement for the Third Brigade Encampment at Selinsgrove give some insight into the thoroughness with which the camp, to be known as Camp Charles Morrison, in honor of the late Chaplain of the Twelfth Infantry, is being planned. The excerpts follow:

Personal Hygiene. Neatness and order, as well as cleanliness, are quite as important in camp as in residences. The arrangement of the clothing, bedding and equipments in tents at all times must be systematic. The interior of tents will be kept at all times clean and tidy. Meals will be eaten in mess tents. No food will be allowed in the living tents. Clothing and bedding will be daily exposed not less than one hour to the sunlight, weather permitting. Except during rainy weather, tent walls will be habitually kept raised. Squad leaders will insist that all men of their squad thoroughly wash their hands immediately after returning from the latrines and immediately before meals. Laxity in these matters always results in a neglect of cleanliness of person and of the camp site and may contaminate the ground and infect the entire command.

Water Supply. The only water authorized to be used by men of this camp is that obtained from the faucets in the camp. Men are cautioned against drinking from unauthorized sources. At any formation for leaving the camp organization commanders will require each member of the command to be provided with a canteen of water. All officers and non-commissioned officers will take necessary steps to prevent waste of water. Stones will be placed around the base of each stand pipe and an upright driven into the ground to support the pipe.

The water system of the camp is under the immediate supervision of the Brigade Quartermaster, to whom any leaks in pipe line or faucets will be at once reported. The water supply is pure and wholesome, and no sterilization of drinking water is necessary. Precautions must be taken against subsequent contamination by keeping all containers scrupulously clean and protected from dust.

Sanitary Inspections. A sanitary inspection will be made by the brigade officer of the day and the brigade surgeon at an hour to be arranged between themselves and the respective commanding officers. The brigade officer of the day will report in writing at 6.15 P. M. each day, the recommendations and criticisms based on such inspection.

Each surgeon of a regiment and separate organization will inspect morning and evening his entire camp, paying especial attention to the dining rooms, kitchens, sinks, incinerators and latrines, and will report his recommendations to the brigade surgeon at the sanitary inspection.

Loading and unloading of baggage, detraining and entraining of troops will be done under the supervision and inspection of the Brigade Quartermaster and his assistants and organizations will be rated thereon. Troops marching to and from camp will not be permitted to carry any hand baggage or articles other than the prescribed uniform and equipment.

Brigade headquarters will be established in camp from 11 o'clock A. M., Friday, July 4, 1913, to 12 o'clock M., Saturday, July 12.

Major Charles P. Gearhart, Judge Advocate, is hereby detailed as Provost Marshal of the camp.

All persons found peddling any goods, wares or merchandise, selling food or any form of drinks will be rigidly excluded from the camp. All forms of hawking and peddling will be abated as a nuisance in accordance with provisions of the military code. No sutler will be permitted within two miles of the camp ground except the brigade sutler, whose places of business and stock of goods will be inspected daily by the Medical Department, and who must destroy any goods, food or drinks condemned by that department. This will not be construed to prevent milkmen and farmers from entering the camp to sell the products of their own farms, they having first secured a written permit from the brigade surgeon.

The morning drill period will be devoted to practical training for field service in accordance with the program herein established. At the close of all exercises the troops will be marched to camp by their non-commissioned officers, and the officers will discuss the exercises on the ground.

When a regular army officer is present as Instructor-Inspector, he will conduct the discussion.

The daily program of instruction will be as follows:

General.

2.00 to 6.30 P. M. Drills and exercises during this period of each afternoon, except Sunday, will be as prescribed by the regimental or other organization commander, but subject to the parades prescribed in the last paragraph of Section 13 of this order and to requirements of the State Inspection.

Saturday, July 5—7.15 A. M. to 12.30 P. M.—Making and opening camp.

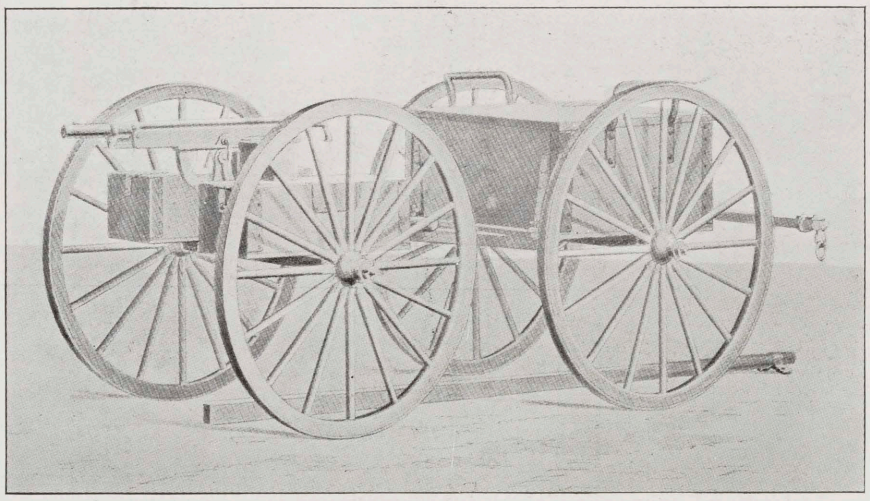
Sunday, July 6—Church Call, 9.00 A. M. Mass, 10.00 A. M. The attendance at mass, however, not to excuse from the 9 A. M. service. First Call for Brigade Review, 3.50 P. M.

Monday, July 7—7.15 A. M. to 12.30 P. M.—Battalion Problems—Protection of a marching column.

Tuesday, July 8—7.15 A. M. to 12.30 P. M.—Battalion Problem—Protection and a Bivouac.

Wednesday, July 9—7.15 A. M. to 12.30 P. M.—Regimental Problem—A march concluding with establishment of an outpost and a bivouac for the night with individual cooking.

Thursday, July 10—7.15 A. M. to 12.30 P. M.—General manoeuver of the entire brigade.



Colonel Dorrance Reynolds, Ninth Infantry, has nearly completed the organization of a Machine Gun Company located at Hazleton. It is stated that the membership is made up of the best young men in the community, and that Colonel Reynolds expects to have the Company enlisted in time for the coming Encampment. The Regiment before leaving Wilkes-Barre, will make a street parade and celebrate the Fourth of July in Camp.

Friday, July 11—7.15 A. M. to 12.30 P. M.—Battalion Problems—Attack and defense.

This program is subject to modification on the day of the annual inspection.

The problems for each forenoon will be prepared by the U. S. Army Instructors assigned to the various organizations. The program for the attached troop of cavalry will be announced to the cavalry commander at a later date.

The manoeuver and drill areas assigned to organizations for their exercises each day are as shown by colored pencil markings on a map posted in the Adjutant General's office at camp headquarters.

Only in exceptional cases will officers or enlisted men be excused from duty. The War Department has decided, under date of April 28 and 30, 1913, that: "The muster of any member of the Organized Militia for pay during camp of instruction will not include a day where absence from instruction or duty for that day exists for any reason other than sickness. Muster in violation of these instructions is false muster." When enlisted men are so excused, it will be on a written pass granted by the regimental or separate organization commanders and approved by the Provost Marshal.

Members of the command leaving camp will be required to be in complete uniform without side arms, and to keep themselves neat and soldierly in appearance. Officers and enlisted men may dispense with the coat if they wear the olive-drab shirt, buttoned at the neck and sleeves. If the olive-drab shirt is worn without the coat, a belt will be worn instead of suspenders, no elastic or other arm bands will be worn; officers will wear insignia of rank on the the collar and non-commissioned officers chevrons on the sleeves of the shirt.

Mail will be collected in and delivered to each organization from Brigade Headquarters. All express or other packages intended for organizations or individuals will be delivered to the quartermaster of the organization.

Enlisted men are forbidden to enter the orchards, yards or houses of civilians except by special permission of the owners. The tying of horses to live trees or the cutting of branches therefrom is prohibited. Growing crops of all kinds must be avoided. All private and public property must be respected. Unavoidable or accidental damage to fences or other property will be repaired, as far as practicable by the organization causing the injury and a report, of the circumstances and damage, made to these headquarters the same day the damage is done. It is the duty of every member of the command to enforce the provisions of this paragraph.

The Commanding General will receive officers on official business at 7.30 P. M., at which hour one officer from each regiment and attached organization will report. Department officers on duty with the brigade will receive officers having similar duties in the respective organizations at 8 P. M. daily.

Officers reporting will bring the correspondence of their commands requiring attention to headquarters. They will receive the orders for the following day, and there will be in each department and at the Commanding General's headquarters a discussion of the work which has been done and is yet to be done.

Great success attended the twelfth annual meeting of Pennsylvania Commandery of "The Naval and Military Order of the Spanish-American War," held at the University Club, Philadelphia, recently. Reports indicated that the organization is in every sense in a flourishing condition.

V; Captain Charles F. Hess, U. S. V.; Captain Caldwell K. Biddle, U. S. V.; Major Charles H. Worman, U. S. V.; Brigadier General Theodore F. Forbes, U. S. A.

Three delegates and three alternates were elected to the annual meeting of the National Commandery at Boston, Mass.: Delegates—

Captain Charles M. Machold, U. S. V.; Lieutenant Robert K. Wright, late U. S. N.; Brigadier General J. Lewis Good. Alternates—Captain Charles F. Hess, U. S. V.; Captain George B. Zane, U. S. V.; Lieutenant Joseph A. Steinmetz, U. S. V.

After adjournment the companions proceeded to the banquet room with many invited guests. The toastmaster of the evening was Lieutenant Robert Kemp Wright, late U. S. Navy.

The addresses were unusually interesting and held the keen interest of the diners.

Captain Reynold T. Hall, U. S. N., spoke of "The Battle of Manila Bay," and told in a delightful manner of one of the great American sea victories.

In his address, Captain Hall said:

"When Spain's neglect to accede to our demands made war imminent, the people of the Pacific coast, like those of the Atlantic, made strenuous efforts to have their ports made secure against attack from a hostile fleet.

DANCING PAVILION AT ROLLING GREEN PARK.

"The wise judgment of those who had the conduct of affairs at Washington decided that the best way to protect our coast lines was to cripple or destroy the enemy's ships that could be brought to attack our shores.

"The terse yet comprehensive cablegram received by Commodore Dewey while his squadron was in Hong Kong waters, "War has commenced. Proceed to the Philippines and use every effort to capture or destroy the Spanish fleet there," was an effective, and ultimately an adequate protection of the Pacific coast.

"Our country's squadron of the Asiatic Station had been promptly assembled in Hong Kong waters, thoroughly prepared for war, and remained in perfect readiness awaiting only the order to "Go." When in Mirs Bay the signal was hoisted on the flagship "Get under way," a current of enthusiasm ran through the entire fleet. The forces which had been steadily accumulating through long and patient years of effort on the part of the navy were at last to be utilized, and in just such a struggle as prophetic eyes looking into the future had foreseen and made ready for. The long period of restraint was over, the long-looked-for opportunity had come, and all were filled with subdued eagerness though in a cool fighting mood.

"The Battle of Manila Bay has been so often fought over by talker and writer, and its subsequent events so exhaustively and so well set forth that little remains to be told by me save personal impressions.

"Throughout the entire battle there was everywhere perfect discipline and cool, deliberate execution of orders. Everywhere there was precision and promptness. Excepting a ring of irrepressible cheering when a shot was seen to do good execution, the condition of things aboard ship was just as though we were at target practice We had had target practice, the Spaniards evidently had not. The waters of the bay boiled with falling shot and shell, and many burst about and beyond us. The position of the Spaniards, coupled with their heavy batteries on shore, gave them a tremendous advantage Nothing but good luck and the bad aim of the Spaniards saved us from horrible loss of life that day.

"The Petrel, on which I had the honor of serving, had the good fortune to be struck only once, and that time by a glancing fragment of a shell that had exploded short of us.

"Over among the enemy's ships there was quite a different state of affairs. The Reina Christina, flagship, was a wreck about her decks, guns disabled, and the dead and wounded scattered around Her steering gears were carried away, one of her boiler drums had been pierced by a shell, and she was on fire forward and on fire aft The Castilla also had her sides riddled and crushed by the rain of projectiles and she was also on fire. The San Antonio de Ulloa, also on fire, had so many holes shot in her sides about the water line that she flooded and sank before she burned. The other Spanish ships, hard pressed, ran back into the shoal water of Bacu Bay, behind the guns at Cavite Naval Station and were abandoned by their crews. Later in the day we burned them.

"As the battle came to a close, to the Petrel was assigned the task of entering Cavite Harbor and destroying whatever vessels remained there. In obediance to a signal from the flagship to "pass inside and destroy all shipping" the executive officer of the Petrel went with a whaleboat and seven men in the face of a large armed force on shore and set fire and burned six of the enemy's ships.

"The men who went in this whaleboat were aware that it was the only available boat on the Petrel that would float after the battle, all the others having been damaged by the concussion of our own guns.

"I do not know the names of all who went in that boat, but I do know that when the call for volunteers was made, had one-tenth of those who volunteered to go been allowed to get in the boat, it would have sunk from overloading.

"Every man in the Petrel, like every man in every ship of our squadron, was able, ready and eager to do or dare anything required of him.

"The American sailor man beats the world behind a gun, and he has shown the world something to make his fighting qualities respected. Modern naval warfare is a warfare of naval activities, of cruising, of motion, of manoeuvering. The rapid evolutions of a naval fighting machine are dependent upon those controlling the machinery of direction and propulsion, and although in order to maintain positions and take advantage of every opportunity the telegraphs were in constant use from 'starboard' to 'port,' and from 'full speed' to 'stop,' not an engine failed to respond in the quickest possible time.

"No three months of naval history ever showed greater preparedness, greater alertness, greater devotion to duty in every part of a man-of-war from bridge and conning tower, on deck and behind guns, to down below where life is made almost unbearable by excessive heat.

"There were few, if any, mistakes made by our navy in the war with Spain. There was preparedness, there was efficiency, and success was due to long and untiring attention to details. Nothing was too small to receive careful and unremitting attention. The highest type of battleship man cannot be called by the mere blast of emergency's trumpet of war. He is a product of forethought, discipline, bravery. Mere courage rarely gains victories. It is an inspiring element in a warrior's equipment, but it is only a Napoleon who can mould it into serviceable form in a few weeks or a few months.

"We were ready, and we got there; we will always get there! Every man from every ship is ready to fight another battle to-morrow, and the mainspring of his joy at coming back home sound in life and limb is, that he is ready for another call to do battle again for the honor of his country and for its high mission of setting up its sublime standard of justice, and of freedom for all."

The other speakers and their subjects were: Major General Charles Bowman Dougherty, "The Army;" Captain John Glover Muir, U. S. M. C., "Expedition to China;" Captain Charles M. Machold, U. S. V., Junior Vice-Commander-in-Chief, "The National Commandery;" Brigadier General James B. Coryell, "Pennsylvania Commandery;" Colonel Christopher T. O'Neill, "The Campaign in Porto Rico," and Commander William G. Randle, late U. S. N.," "Merchant Marine in Time of War."

Among others present were: Captain Joseph Strauss, U. S. N.; Lieutenant Jesse R. Fifer, U. S. V., Washington, D. C.; Lieutenant Colonel Samuel W. Jefferis, of Pittsburg, Pa.; Colonel Hamilton D. Turner; Lieutenant William H. Clewell, U. S. V., of Summit Hill, Pa.; Mr. William D. Randle, of Chester, Pa.; Lieutenant William H. Davis, U. S. V., Washington; Lieutenant John S. Muckle, late U. S. N.; Lieutenant Charles C. Meyers, U. S. V.; Captain Charles H. Speckman; Lieutenant Colonel Charles P. Hunt. There were forty-one companions in all present.

EASTON CITY GUARD.

The fifteenth anniversary of the organization of Company I, Thirteenth Infantry, N. G. P. (Easton City Guard), and of its muster into the National Guard of Pennsylvania was celebrated with a banquet Friday evening, May 23rd, which was featured by the attendance of Major General C. Bow Dougherty, the Division Commander, Brigadier General C. M. Clement, commanding the Third Brigade, Congressman A. Mitchell Palmer, of Stroudsburg, and a gathering of the prominent citizens of the city of Easton—an assemblage that paid a fitting tribute to the company which from its very inception has set a standard in ratings for efficiency that has made it the envy of all other companies in the division.

The absence of Brigadier General Thomas J. Stewart, Adjutant General of Pennsylvania, due to the sad bereavement he sustained in the death of his beloved wife, was the only incident to mar a carefully prepared and most auspicious occasions.

Lieutenant Colonel B. Rush Field, retired, formerly of the Thirteenth Infantry, and the first Captain of the Easton Company, presided as toastmaster and following the serving of a most excellent menu, reviewed the interesting events surrounding the organization of the company in the stirring days that followed the blowing up of the battleship Maine in the harbor of Havana and the declaration of the war with Spain in 1898.

Colonel Field recalled the enthusiasm of the young men of the city at the forks of the Delaware and pictured the scene on the night of the muster when a sufficient number of men to organize a battalion presented themselves before the mustering officers. "It was indeed a holy occasion," said the toastmaster, "a time that roused the best sentiments in men and drew them to the support of a downfallen and wrecked sister nation."

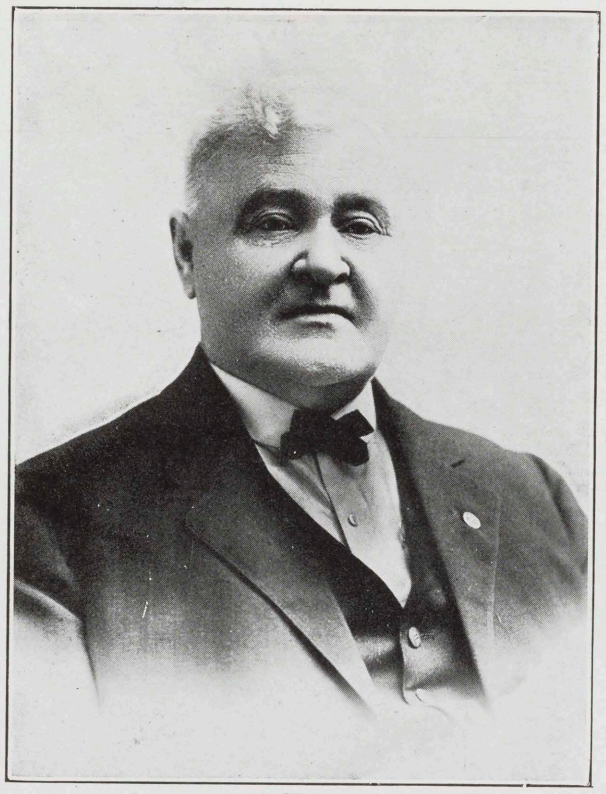
The speeches that followed the call of the toastmaster marked a decided departure from the ordinary routine and some history was written before the smoke of the oratory cleared away and the banquet ended. Congressman Palmer, who represents the district, including Northampton county, was first called upon to respond.

Easton has the only company in the National Guard in the entire four counties which make up Congressman Palmer's district and the members of the company have been looking forward anxiously to the time when they could count upon their Congressman to lend his support to the proposed militia pay bill and other matters of interest to the Guardsmen of the State.

From the very outset Congressman Palmer caused his audience to sit up by launching into a defense of a non-resistant policy on the part of the United States Government. Calling attention to his Quaker ancestry he voiced his aversion to fights, but added that as a public servant he was glad of the opportunity to learn from military men their ideas on the question of the militia in relation to the Federal Government. He said he had no hesitancy in stating where he stood in fixing the status of militia affairs in relation to the government and was clear in his mind on two things: first that the militia of the States ought to be held strictly in reserve to indicate the great latent strength of the nation, and second that all ought, as military men and civilians, do all possible to preserve in its entirety the peaceful relations of all nations of the earth.

The speaker declared that he was unalterably opposed to a great show of strength on the part of the government as indicated by a great standing army; guns sticking out of every port, soldiers patrol-

GATEWAY INTO SUNBURY.



CAPTAIN EDWARD R. SHERMAN.

Captain Edward R. Sherman, of Bradford, though always an active man of affairs, has also been deeply interested in the welfare of the Sixteenth Infantry, and has been zealous in his efforts for the advance of the militia, generally. Captain Sherman was a distinguished soldier in the Civil War, participating in many famous engagements, and was wounded at the second Battle of Bull Run He is a Past Commander of Grand Army Post, No. 141, of Bradford. Captain Sherman has long been identified with the oil industry, and has likewise been an active leader of the Republican forces in McKean county, and served with distinction as Coroner of the county. He was likewise prominently identified with the Kendall Methodist Episcopal Church for years.

ing every boundary, and dreadnaughts scouring the seas. He held that an adherance to a policy of refusing to fight would have its effect on any Christian nation.

The time must come, he said, when the militia must be paid something, following his reiteration of his belief that the militia should be held as a reserve force and in conclusion he added that he hoped the time would soon come when Congress could see its way clear to write a law on the statute books to that effect.

It was after Mr. Palmer finished that the fireworks of the evening were set off, for every following speaker took occasion to riddle his "non-resistant" policy with shot and shell, a spirit of the most militant brilliancy characterizing every succeeding toast.

Brigadier General E. J. McClernand, U. S. A., retired, who will make his home in Easton, was a guest at the banquet and the second speaker. General McClernand told interestingly of his various trips to foreign countries as an observer for the regular army and adding that there is none wise enough to tell when soldiers will be needed again, told the Guardsmen that if they never did anything else than keep alive an interest in military affairs in their city, they were doing a most excellent work. As long as our country elects to rely largely upon volunteers in times of need it will be necessary to have a sufficient number of young men who can qualify as instructors and in this direction there is a big field for the members of the National Guard.

Major General Dougherty, while voicing his high personal regard for Congressman Palmer, took occasion to differ from him on the matter of a non-resistant policy. This nation, he said, was born out of resistance and our whole national life is a protest against non-resistance. By an act of Congress the National Guard is recognized as a part of the first line of defense and the men who serve the State in this branch of the service are entitled to more than glittering promises. He added that this country does not want to see again any such sacrifice of life as characterized the earlier days of the War of the Rebellion and at the outbreak of the Spanish-American War. He held that the nation's greatest safeguard against this lies in a well trained militia. Discounting the theory that a body like the Hague tribunal could amicably adjust all disputes between nations, General Dougherty cited the "Boston Tea Party," and asked if such a tribunal would not have decided that England had a right to tax its colonies as it saw fit. What would have been the outcome, he asked, if the problems leading up to the Civil War had been submitted to a tribunal of that nature? Coming down to the time of the Spanish-American War with the terrible misgovernment of Cuba he asked would not the Hague tribunal have decided that Spain had a right to govern its territories as it pleased?

Brigadier General C. M. Clement handed out his broadsides in response to Congressman Palmer's utterances in a particularly happy vein. He lauded the members of the company on the excellent record and added that the standard of efficiency in the Guard seemed to be rated downward from Company I.

General Clement said that while he, too, believed in peace it would be criminal to remain in a state of unpreparedness.

Former State Senator Robert E. James, president of the Easton Trust Company, and a former member of the Easton Greys, (Company F, Fourth Infantry), delivered the most striking speech of the evening. The only hope of the land, he held, is in the patriotism of its people, in the strong combative, aggressive youth of the land. The time has not yet come for universal peace, for universal peace may mean individual dishonor.

Shall we obey this voice of the Orient; shall we do what the Kaiser tells us to; shall we connect two oceans, so that our enemies can better attack us? If a foe comes on our western shores, how shall we meet it? Shall it be with the singing of hymns, with bowed heads, to take the punishment meted out to us, merited or unmerited, and bring on the contempt of the world? We are not yet ready for that. The history of the United States is not yet finished and never will be finished in submission to any power, unless it be the power that emanates from Calvary. What are our dollars worth if they don't conserve our honor? Let us use those millions, so that no nation may dare to transgress our borders without tribute to us. Then we will be worthy descendants of our ancestors who brought forth this nation by their life's blood.

Mr. James spoke of the mistakes of unpreparedness in past wars, ho wthousands of lives were sacrificed before raw recruits were turned into veterans. Is it worth our while, he asked, to use some of our millions to put this nation in a state of preparation to save thousands of lives at first and millions of dollars later? To-day, 40,000 Japs, landed on the coast of California, could sweep that coast from end to end. No 200,000 unskilled men to-day could resist them with their deadly fatalism and devotion.

In the absence of Colonel F. W. Stillwell, Comander of the Thirteenth Infantry, Major P. J. Burke, commanding the battalion to which the Easton Company is attached, responded. Major Burke's inherent love for the military bristled all through his stirring address and his opposition to any policy that smacked of a non-resistant type was most emphatic.

Major Fred R. Drake, who is looked upon as the originator of the Easton Company and who served as its Captain during the period when the company first took the lead of the division in ratings in 1899, responded to the toast, "The Easton City Guard."

Major Drake reviewed the early days of the company and urged every man to feel his own share in the responsibility for the continued success of the company. He proposed that medals of honor be awarded to the three present members of the company who were members of the original company: Captain F. M. Godley, First Sergeant J. H. Waltman and Sergeant John S. Lehr. The proposition was received with general approval and a committee consisting of the captains of the company was appointed to carry the idea into execution.

Captain Frank M. Godley, the present efficient commander of the company, was the last speaker of the evening.

Every speaker at the banquet took occasion to heap words of praise upon the head of the popular young Captain and the welcome he received from the members of his company as he arose in response to the call of the toastmaster told better than words can tell the esteem in which he is held by the men who have helped him to maintain the most enviable reputation of the company.

Captain Godley had a word to say to the citizens of the city urging them to more loyal support of things military, putting in a strong plea for more active interest on the part of parents of eligible young men and on the part of employers who are inclined to look with disfavor upon efforts of men in their employ to get away from business to attend to military duties.

Letters of regret were read from Colonel L. A. Watres, of Scranton, who was unavoidably detained.

SKELETON AND JOINTS.

Lieutenant Eugene H. Dickenshied, assigned Fourth Infantry, recently gave a number of lectures to his medical corps, and to simplify the instructions and recitations Sergeant Lynn made a special compilation of the work, which received special commendation from Major M. H. Taggart, Inspector's Department.

There are about 200 bones in a skeleton and 32 teeth.

Bone is composed of one-third animal matter and two-thirds mineral matter.

Mineral matter is composed mostly of lime salts.

Animal matter is composed mostly of gelatine.

Mineral matter gives hardness to bone.

Animal matter gives toughness to bone.

The end of long bones is spongy or porous.

The shaft is compact and hollow which contains the marrow.

The bone is covered by vascular membrane (the periostum).

This nourishes the bone; if stripped off the bone, the bone is apt to die.

The cartilage or gristle is an elastic substance like bone being without mineral matter.

There are four (4) kinds of bones, long, short, flat, irregular.

Example. Long bone, thigh bone.
" Short bone, whist bone.
" Flat bone, skull bone.
" Irregular bone, pelvio bone.

The spinal column or back bone is composed of 33 bones. These are separated by pads of elastic cartilage and bound together by strong ligaments.

The spinal column contains the spinal cord.

The lower part of the spinal column with the two nameless bones, (or innominate bones at the side and in front and the saorum and cocoyx behind), form the pelvis.

On each side of the pelvis is a cup shaped cavity which receives the head of Femor and makes the hip joint.

The ribs are joined to the spinal column, and the breast bone in front. This makes a cage to contain and protect the vital organs, (heart, lungs, stomach, liver, spleen).

The skull is in two (2) parts, the cranium containing the brain, and the face.

The visible portion of the cranium is composed of six (6) bones; Frontal, occipital, 2 parietal and 2 temporal (the Ethmoid and sphenoid are invisible and are back of the face).

In the lower part of the occipital is a large opening through which the spinal cord passes.

The face is composed of 14 bones as follows: 2 lacrimal, 2 nasal, 2 palate, 2 inferior turbinate, 2 superior maxillary, 2 malor, the vamor and the inferior maxilla.

Joints.

A joint is a place where two (2) bones meet.

There are three (3) kinds of joints; ball and socket, hinge, and immovable joints.

Example. Ball and socket joints, hip and shoulder.
" Hinge joints, knee and elbow.
" Immovable joints, called sutures of the skull.

The ends of joints are covered with smooth cartilage, this cartilage is covered with a glistening membrane called the synovial membrane, this membrane secretes the joint oil.

All joints are bound together by ligaments.

The motion of all joints is usually limited by ligaments which are placed in front, back and on each side; these ligaments are generally surrounded by a capsular ligament enclosing the whole joint.

A dislocation of a joint is a slipping away of the joint surfaces from each other.

Muscles.

The muscle is lean meat.

Each muscle is composed of a number of fibres held together by connective tissue, this in turn is enclosed in a fibrous sheet; the function of a muscle is to contract; if a muscle is cut across both ends by their contraction will produce a gaping wound or if a bone is fractured the contraction will cause the ends of broken bones to override each other. There are two (2) kinds of muscles, voluntary and involuntary muscles.

Example. Voluntary muscles, limbs, etc.
" Involuntary muscles, heart, etc.

The action of the muscles on the bones causes various special motion.

Flexion, drawing arm up.

Extension, throwing arm out.

Pronation, carrying palm down.

Supernation, carrying palm up.

Rotation, rotating limb on its axis.

Abduction, throwing limb out.

Adduction, throwing limb in.

After death muscles become rigid (called rigormortis).

Connective tissue or cellulor tissue connect together all parts of the body and supports the blood vessels, nerves, and fat.

Skin.

The skin is an elastic membrane covering the entire body and is continued with the mucus membrane, consisting of two layers, the cuticle and derma.

Example. Cuticle, outer skin.
" Derma, inner or true skin.

The derma contains blood vessels, nerves, sebaceous and sweat-glands.

The appendages of the skin are the hair and nails.

Sebaceous glands secrete the oily substance.

Sweat-glands secrete the perspiration, the average amount being about two (2) pints every 24 hours.

The skin protects the body from heat, cold and infection.

Nervous System.

The nervous system consists of the brain, spinal cord, cerebro-spinal system, ganglia and sympathetic system.

The brain is in the cranium and is the seat of intelligence (head-quarters telegraph office).

The spinal cord extends downward through the spinal canal.

The ganglia or small masses of nervous matter found around the spinal column, heart, lungs, blood vessels and great viscera, these are connected with each other, and the cerebro-spinal system by the sympathetic system.

The brain consists of the cerebrum (large brain); cerebellum (little brain), pons, and medulla oblongata.

The outer portion of the brain is composed of grey matter.

The inner portion of the brain is composed of white matter.

The grey matter is the seat of the mind.

The white matter is a collection of nerve fibres and these fibres cross and intersect with each other and cross each other by the way of the pons or bridges.

The brain is very delicate, and is easily injured, and when injured is apt to cause paralysis.

There are two (2) kinds of nerves, motor and sensory nerves.

There are five (5) senses: Smell, taste, touch, seeing and hearing.

Touch and taste is presided over by the spinal nerves.

Sight, hearing, and smell is presided over by the cranial nerves.

Heart.

The circulatory system is composed of the heart, blood vessels and the lymphatic system.

The total quantity of the blood is about one-twelfth the weight of the body.

The blood vessels are composed of arteries and veins.

The blood is composed of cells and liquor sanguinis.

Liquor sanguinis consists of serum and the elements of fibrin When bleeding occurs fibrin is formed and the blood clots.

Serum contains the principal nourishing ingredients of blood, albumen, fat, sugar, salts, and gases.

The heart is the organ which keeps the blood in circulation and is composed of four (4) parts, right and left auricle, and right and left ventricle.

The blood passes from the left auricle to the left ventricle. From there into the aorta, this arches backward to the left side of the spinal column, from the arch of the aorta are given off the arteries which supply the head and arms. The aorta in descending gives off branches which supply the thorax, stomach, kidneys, and intestines. In the pelvis it is divided and forms the two common iliacs; these again form the external and internal iliacs, the external iliac forms the femoral which runs down to the bend of the knee and is again divided into two (2) branches, (peroneal and tibial arteries).

The blood is then gathered up by the veins and returned to the right auricle (right heart), from there to the right ventricle, then passed through the lungs to have the gases purified and returned to the left auricle (left heart) for recirculation.

The lymphatic is sometimes called the absorbing system and is made up of lymphatic and lacteal vessels and lymph glands. The lymphatic vessels are found in all parts of the body wherever there are blood vessels. Those found in the intestines are called lacteals The glands are found all over the body and gather up all the impurities or poisons.

The functions of the blood vessels and lymphatic system are to gather up nourishment and distribute it to all parts of the body and at the same time act as a sewer to remove all waste product, both liquid and gas.

Heat Stroke or Sun Stroke.

Usually due to the heat of the sun but may occur in hot rooms.

First Symptoms: Headache, dizziness, irritability, frequent desire to urinate, sees things red or purple, skin dry, pupils contracted, pulse full and strong, respiration snoring, and there may be convulsions, temperature 105 to 109 degrees and sometimes higher, very often unconscious.

Treatment: Taken to coolest place, clothing removed, ice bag applied to the head, cold water poured over the body continually. If he can swallow give cold water, but not ice water.

Heat Exhaustion.

Usually affects a soldier when on a march or when standing at attention on a hot day. It is very much less severe than a heat stroke.

Symptoms: Patient is not unconscious, face pale, skin cool and moist, pupils dilated or normal, pulse very weak, respiration shallow, resembles fainting.

Treatment: Remove into shade, clothing loosened, equipments removed, head kept low, a drink of water (not ice water) or some stimulant (aromatic spirits of ammonia).

Shock.

Nervous depression like fainting, due to physical causes.

Fainting is due to mental causes.

Symptoms: Anxiety, pallor, dilated pupils, trembling, chilly feeling, nausea, clammy skin, very weak pulse, a sighing respiration, a subnormal temperature (normal temperature 98.6 deg. Fehr.) The amount or degree of shock is very often due to the part of the body affected. It is more severe in injuries of the trunk than of the limbs, and may prove fatal.

Treatment: Consists of heat externally and stimulants internally A hemorrrage should be carefully looked for and controlled if found.

Contagion and Infection.

Contagion: A communication of a disease by contact (immediate or mediate) or by inhaling the effluvia from one already affected Often used as synonymous with infection, the specific agency by which a disease is communicated and developed.

Infection: An infectious disease is one that is capable of infecting other persons, causing same disease.

Small-pox and malaria fever are both infectious.

Small-pox is a contagious disease.

Malaria fever is not a contagious disease, because no amount of simple contact with an infected person can produce the disease. The infection of the disease must be carried by a mosquito.

Infectious Diseases: Malaria fever, hyphoid fever, yellow fever, tuberculosis, dysentery, pneumonia, erysipelas.

Contagious Diseases: Small-pox, diphtheria, measles, scarlet fever, chicken-pox, mumps.

A SUGGESTION AS TO SELECTION.

By Thomas Marshall Spaulding, First Lieutenant, Coast Artillery Corps.

(Courtesy of the Journal of the Military Service Institution)

The subject of promotion by selection has been in the air for a number of years; it has been argued pro and con; many schemes, more or less detailed, have been advanced for its operation; and to all appearances there is general agreement on only two points: that the present system of promotion has serious faults, but that the adoption of selection would open the way for evils more serious still. It seems safe to say—though in the absence of any formal vote no one can prove the statement—that most officers feel that a means of rewarding the meritorious and of making the loafer and the incompetent suffer for his deficiencies would be an excellent thing. It is absolutely safe to add that the overwhelming majority of officers feel that it is better to forego forever any such arrangement than to adopt selection or elimination on any such basis as has yet been proposed; and the writer is with the majority in this matter.

Now may there not yet be found some plan that will give more incentive to zeal and efficiency and yet avoid the most serious of the disadvantages urged against selection?

To begin with, what are these disadvantages? We all know a series of them, which it is needless to repeat; but, after all, there are only two or three that are really serious. If these could be eliminated there would not be enough left to counterbalance the recognized defects of the present system. These two or three, however, everyone agrees to be of vital importance.

First of all, there is the danger that selection would be governed by political rather than military considerations—that the selecting authority might lack the knowledge necessary to judge the merits of a soldier, or, having the knowledge, might give more weight to less worthy considerations. This objection is already partly disposed of, for it is generally agreed that selection, if it comes, must rest in the hands of soldiers who are capable of forming reasonable opinions as to military efficiency, and who, though only human, are presumably less susceptible to purely political influence than civilians would be.

So far, so good. We have our selection board, the members all able to recognize a good soldier when they find him and all impervious to outside influence. The real trouble is still before us. How are the members of this board to pass on the qualifications of some hundreds of officers whom they never have served with, never seen, never heard of? They are to have the efficiency records of all officers laid before them, to be sure, but that is a pretty uncertain means of judging. Here and there they can determine that some one man is very, very good, and that someone else is very, very bad, but they cannot succeed in grading properly the ninety per cent. who are in neither the military genius nor the total failure class. Again, however free they may be from political influences, each one is subject to his own prejudices, his personal likes and dislikes. Of course, he will conscientiously strive not to be affected by personal feelings, but no man living can help it.

The proper method then is to have the selections made by men who have had a chance to form their opinions by personal contact, by actual service with the candidates for promotion, and still to have the element of personal prejudice made so small as to be negligible. Can this be done?

It is obvious that no one man, and no small group of men, has personal acquaintance with a majority of the lieutenants in any arm of the service, or even with a majority of the captains. Lieutenants and captains cannot figure in our plan then. Indeed, why should they? Great abilities cannot display themselves without opportunity, and opportunity may be a long time coming. Again, the man who begins with an apparently small mental capacity or a pronounced aversion for work may soon overcome these traits and end by becoming a valuable officer. Captains and lieutenants, too, are subject to rigid professional examination for promotion.

This leaves us then with our colonels and lieutenant-colonels to be appointed by selection, and who is better qualified to select them than their immediate superiors in their own branches of the service? Let us say that we have twenty colonels who have to select one among twenty lieutenant-colonels for promotion. Each one of the selecting body is personally acquainted with fifteen or more of the candidates and knows all the rest thoroughly by reputation—far more thoroughly than he can know any man through merely an efficiency report filed at the War Department. Personal feeling, too, will count for less on a board of twenty or fifty than on one of three or four or five.

Briefly, the scheme is this: At the end of each year each colonel lists the lieutenant-colonels in his arm of the service in what he considers the order of their efficiency. Each lieutenant-colonel does the same as regards the majors. When these lists are received at the War Department each lieutenant-colonel and major is credited according to his position on these various lists. Such value may be assigned to places as desired—any such simple plan as giving twenty for first place on a list, nineteen for second place, and so on. Each man then will have a number of points depending on the opinions of his merit formed by all the officers in the grade next senior. To these should be added points due to length of service. Seniority can be weighted as heavily as thought desirable; it can be made to count as little as the vote of a single officer or as much as those of all of them combined. All these things would be permanently settled at the time of the enactment of this hypothetical law. These lists would govern promotions, as vacancies occurred, for one year, and then be superseded by new ones.

Thus the promotion of a field-officer would depend partly upon length of service; partly upon the judgment of a large number of his seniors, nearly all of them intimately acquainted with his abilities; and yet personal feelings which might cause some one of his seniors to place him too high or too low on his list could affect the final standing only slightly.

Does this plan seem to meet the most serious objections to promotion by selection? The writer freely confesses that he is by no means sure of it himself, but he does think that he may be groping in the right direction. Perhaps someone else may grope a little farther.

EDITORIAL.

A number of prominent officers of the National Guard have taken a decided stand against the further examinations specified in general orders, and it is stated that at a recent conference held at Harrisburg, one well-known gentleman pointed out what he termed the danger of encumbering the officers with further studies. He said that while the methods are meant to bring about a great deal of good, officers have found it simply impossible without doing a great injustice to their personal affairs, to continue along this line. It is a known fact that several prominent field officers have emphatically stated they would not stand for a re-election unless these student courses and examinations were dropped or modified.

As a matter of fact, a number of officers have simply declined to take an examination, and have pointed out to Major General Dougherty the utter folly of keeping up this plan. Colonel Frank G. Sweeney, Inspector General, in a recent interview, while speaking of the splendid work that Major Farnsworth has mapped out for the Guard, declared that the orders must be modified or many of the experienced officers would be driven out of the service.

General Logan is also decidedly opposed to the continuance of this system. In speaking about the work required of the officers, Major E. Lowry Humes, a prominent judicial officer and a member of the Pennsylvania Legislature, said, "Why not commercialize the Guard?" It is also known that General Clement has taken a decided stand, and, in fact, has requested his three Colonels to considerably lessen the questions of the examinations.

A very prominent department chief expressed himself as decidedly opposed to loading up the officers with any more of the war game. He said the officers and men, in a great measure, went into the Guard in a sense of duty, at the same time expecting some little pleasure in return, and not a constant grinding. This same officer stated that should an emergency arise, the intelligence of the military officers would not be found wanting and that the orders are unnecessary.

The military spirit in Stroudsburg is quite manifest, and while the mustering in of an Infantry Company attached to the Thirteenth Infantry has been deemed inexpedient at this time, it is likely that the sixty young men comprising this prospective company will be enlisted in the eight Scranton companies. It is thought that Colonel Stillwell will then detach these men from the original companies and form a separate company under the command of a detailed officer.

In other words, during the period of encampment, the Thirteenth Regiment will practically possess eleven companies, and these new men will be given an opportunity of handling their own company. This is not an innovation. A combination of this kind was in force several years ago in one of the regiments of the First Brigade, and likewise in the Second Brigade.

The Centennial Anniversary Parade of the State Fencibles, and the various entertainments incidentally thereto, was a revelation. The affair was "pulled off" in a truly wonderful manner. The military officials spoke of the achievements in the highest terms. The reception and the entertainment provided at the Bellevue-Stratford after the parade was a gigantic undertaking of itself. It was a picture of American democracy where enlisted men and officers affiliated as can only be found in this country.

Major General Dougherty, Adjutant General Stewart, and several other officers were interested visitors at the State Fencibles Armory during the parade, and it is stated that General Dougherty was very much surprised to find such a fine organization with its magnificent quarters in existence outside of the Guard. A number of officers, during the celebration, expressed themselves as being hopeful of the return of the command to the Guard in the near future.

Several officers received a number of inquiries regarding the service of the Ancient and Honoable Artillery Company of Boston.

While it is a recognized fact that it antedates all other military organizations in the United States, and has the proud distinction of having existed for eight years under the reign of King George III, of England, during the colonial period, there does not appear to be any muster in or muster out record in the War Department of this ancient company as a body, although it is a known fact that many of its members served with distinction in all of the wars of the country.

The only military company with a continuous active record is the First Troop, Philadelphia City Cavalry, which was organized November 17, 1774. The records of the War Department show that this organization, as such, has participated in all of the wars and insurrections, and the muster in and muster out rolls confirm these facts.

Friends of the National Guard are hopeful that the Legislature will act generously in its appropriations to the State Armory Board in order that the body may be provided with funds to provide for the erection of many new armories throughout the Commonwealth. In many sections, the quarters of the companies are deplorable. The State has adopted the policy of providing armories for the Guard, and it is to be hoped that it will act generously in this direction this year. The Journal knows of no more patriotic manner of spending money, and it is also a matter of wise administration in thus providing for the greater security to law and order and the assured protection of life and property.

NOTES

The roster corrections for the month ending June 1st show over fifty changes, the greatest being in the First, Sixteenth and Third Regiments.

Much interest is being taken throughout the country in the twenty-second annual meeting of the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States to be held at Denver, Colorado, September 16-19. The military surgeons, of recent years, have increased their influence in the National Guard, and the camp sanitation, in particular, has increased to a wonderful extent in consequence. The surgeons have been increasing the scope of their departmental work in many respects. Only recently, Field Hospital No. 1 was organized in the city of Pittsburgh by Major and Surgeon James F. Edwards, M. R. C., U. S. A., and First Lieutenant and Assistant Surgeon Charles E. Reif, Medical Corps, N. G. P., and forty men were mustered in. This particular branch of the service had been strongly advocated by United States Army officials. It is expected that Field Hospital No. 2 will shortly be organized in Philadelphia under the supervision of Major Henry H. Doan, Medical Corps, assigned Third Infantry.

Mahanoy City is scheduled to have a modern one company armory to cost about $20,000. A number of the leading citizens are deeply interested in this project, and a suitable site has already been offered the Armory Board. Colonel Joseph B. Hutchison and Captain Abraham Hinch are hopeful of having Company E housed in a substantial fortress within the next year.

OUR ENGINEERS ON A TWO DAYS' PRACTICE MARCH, SHOWING BRIDGE CONSTRUCTION.

An election for Major in the Eighth Infantry vice Major Adam Garver to retired list will shortly be held. Among the prominent candidates named for the position are Captain Frank E. Ziegler, of Company I, Harrisburg, and Captain Samuel B. Edwards, of Company H, Pottsville. It is stated by a number of line officers that Schuylkill county is entitled to be represented by a field officer at this time.

The unanimous re-election of Major Frank D. Beary, Fourth Infantry, on May 26, was deservedly merited. Major Beary is an officer of rare executive ability, an able tactician, an acknowledged authority in military science, and a capable lecturer. The Journal extends its heartiest congratulations.

Major Louis E. Tafel, commanding the Philadelphia Battalion of the Sixth Infantry, has negotiated a lease with the owner of the old Armory Building formerly occupied by Battery A in West Philadelphia. The location of this battalion into a section of Philadelphia which in itself is a city, should prove most beneficial, particularly in enlisting young men from that locality. For the last ten years these companies have been knocked around from pillar to post, and it is really surprising to note the able manner in which the company officers hold the men together.

Company M, of the Twelfth Infantry, in command of First Lieutenant Russell I. Baker, located at Lewistown, is taking on new life and it is expected that this company will attend the annual manoeuvers with a greatly improved personnel and the maximum strength. Colonel Rufus Elder and a number of former officers and prominent citizens are taking an active interest in the re-organization Mr. H. Earl Barr, of Reedsville, is also mentioned as interesting himself in the welfare of Lieutenant Baker's Company.

Company D, Sixth Infantry, and Battery C, located at Phoenixville, had a "thrilling experience" at Betzwood during the past week, where they gave remarkable exhibitions before the moving picture camera. In addition to the splendid practice, quite a number of desirable recruits were obtained through this innovation.

Great progress is being made in the reorganization of Company E, Twelfth Infantry, at Sunbury. During the month of January, an examination was made of the company under the direction of the Adjutant General, as a result of which the Adjutant General decided to have the company mustered out. On second consideration, the Adjutant General decided to give the members of the company an opportunity to make good. On February 14th new officers were elected and shortly after that practically all new non-commissioned officers were appointed. The company drilled twice a week, and by a system of instruction by sending out a list of questions each week to the non-commissioned officers additional work was done by the non-commissioned officers while at home. The company was inspected on March 25 by Major A. G. Rutherford, Inspector-General's Department, and the consensus of opinion of officers who watched the inspection was that it was one of the best inspections they had ever seen. At the night of the inspection there was a new Captain, a new First Lieutenant, no Second Lieutenant, a new First Sergeant, new Quartermaster-Sergeant, three new duty Sergeants and three new corporals. The officers and non-commissioned officers of Company E are as follows; Captain, C. F. Clement; First Lieutenant, David W. Zimmerman; Second Lieutenant, John W. Fisher; First Sergeant, John A. Snyder; Quartermaster Sergeant, C. E. Propst; Duty Sergeants, H. S. Clemens, G. E. Rothermel, H. W. Phillips, Leroy Whalen; Corporals, J. W. Kreischer, J. C. Kehres, G. H. Williams and H. R. Shaffer.

WHY I AM A NATIONAL GUARDSMAN.

1. I believe in my country's need.
2. I need the physical training of military drill.
3. I want to know how to care for my body in camp and field.
4. I enjoy the rifle practice, and without any cost to me.
5. I would rather live in the open air, and so I go to camp.
6. The annual manoeuvers are instructive, interesting—and inexpensive.
7. I have all the privileges of the armory—no dues.
8. I meet and associate with many able and intelligent men.
9. If there should be war I will know the fundamentals and can shoot, and will know how to fight disease.
10. I most thoroughly believe that every able-bodied citizen should serve at least one enlistment as a citizen soldier.
11. With all these advantages I am away from home only one night each week.
12. If you are interested in the work, for yourself or your son, call personally at the local armory any evening.
